FEARS UPHEAVAL

Leader With Wild Ideas All That Is Needed to Bring Chaos

UNION LEADER'S VIEW

Vauclain, However, Fails to See Any Signs of Serious Unrest

"There isn't any unrest, is there?" asks Samuel Vaulcain, vice president of the Baldwin Lomomotive Works.

"Only some wild person with inflammatory talk is needed to start something," says Joseph M. Richie, representative of the American Federation of Labor in Philadelphia.

These remarks today by a representative employer and a representative trade unionist were made in comment on the report on unrest by Roger Babson, of the education service of the Department of Labor, after investigations in England.

Mr. Parkers will be president of the property of the presentative trade unionist were made in comment on the report of unrest by Roger Babson, of the education service of the Department of Labor, after investigations in England.

Mr. Babson stated in his report that al. Basson stated in his report that unless labor is handled differently in this country the movement toward radical socialism will grow apace.

Mr. Vauclain said that he found no unrest and felt there is less trouble in the labor field than might be expected at a time of stress like the present.

Is There Real Unrest?

"There is no unrest, is there?" he said. "Of course, I know that in some localities there is unemployment, but that is natural when you realize that at the time of the armistice it was necessary for many manufacturers to change from the industries of war to those of peace. Among some it is difficult to make the transformation. Here it seems to go a long all right. In the Baldwin to go along all right. In the Baldwin platt we are maintaining our work, though, of course, the munitions business had to stop. Some of the men went elsewhere and others were merged into our locomotive shops. We are employ-ing only about 5 per cent less men now than we did at the beginning of November, and this decrease is due to the completion of structural work that we had to undertake to put our plant in condition to meet any demand of the described by Mr. Babson was quite at the opposite pole.

"It the people are to be satisfied," he said, "they must get what they are asking in all fairness. That includes a fair working day, a fair wage that will meet the cost of light and add a bit for the surplus needed in emergencies and good housins. The eight-hour day is conceded to be the fair day, and some way must be found to meet the cost-of-living must be found to meet the cost-of-living problem, which has the entire family

Whole Family Complaining

how hard it is to get along. The whole amily complains now.

"Let the employers forsake their standpart policy of waiting till George does it. Let each employer deal fairly and democratically with his men and these fair conditions will come. We fought for world democracy. We candot afford to lose industrial democracy's light here now. But everybody is so dissatisfied that I fear that it will only take a group with a few wild deep to take a group with a few wild ideas to start something."
